Philosophy: meadows, forests, and fields of yellow flowers surround this Andalusian country house. The new design opens our eyes to the landscape, creating a life in touch with the local plants and animals. Framing a part of the pristine landscape, the small house acts as a delicate threshold between indoor and outdoor living. A central, open-plan living, dining, and kitchen space links its panoramic views of the grounds on both sides. Featuring sliding glass partitions, this space can open up completely to the cracks, trees, ancient trees, and sheep passing by to the west and the cows breaking over the golden mountains to the east. Enjoying the mild climate, the fragile and sheltered space provides a breathtaking but unobstructed way to live in and alongside nature. A minimalist deck completes this memorable project, contributing not only to the lifestyle and backing the family into the landscape.
